Project description:

To contribute to the protection of labour rights in Armenia, Decent Work Now! project aims to reach the following overall objective: Enhancement of individual, collective, and state mechanisms of labour and social rights protection and their application in Armenia through empowerment of employees and labour unions and advocacy for legislative framework reform. The action takes on a comprehensive approach to labour rights with a philosophy that the effectiveness of state protection mechanisms and guarantees depends on how empowered and informed individual citizens and labour unions are about their rights. This approach will allow the applicant and partners to build and disseminate resources that inform citizens about their individual and collective labour rights and provide specific skills to those who decide to come together for creating unions and making use of international and local mechanisms for ensuring their right to decent work.

Expected results:

Citizens' labor and social rights protection mechanisms will be improved and implemented due to actions aimed at raising their awareness, providing the necessary legal aid and protecting their violated rights.

As a result of the Project, mechanisms of collective protection of labor rights and human rights-based approach to employment will be strengthened.

The Project will contribute to the reform of state mechanisms of labor rights and social protection through monitoring, analysis of legislation and policy, and recommendations.
